

Senniger Powers' Paul Fleischut Interviewed by Los Angeles Times

A London court is currently hearing arguments over whether Apple Computer Inc.'s launching of a popular iTunes Music Store under the "Apple" mark broke a long-standing deal between Apple Computer and Apple Corps Ltd., the Beatles' record label. The dispute is also pending in a San Francisco court, where Apple Computer is seeking a declaration that it did not breach the deal, and that it is not infringing the Apple Corps logo.

In a recent interview with the Los Angeles Times, Senniger Powers partner Paul Fleischut commented on the dispute, stating "I think that people are probably more likely to associate [the apple logo] with [Apple Computer] than with the Beatles' publishing company."

Below is the weblink to read the entire article.

<http://www.latimes.com/business/la-fi-apple30mar30,1,2696086.story?ctrack=1&cset=true>